My opinion may not count in your little consensus here (freedom should not be a popularity contest anyway) as I am from Canada, but I just wanted to point out that you people need to decide whether you want to live in the USA or China. In the USA, as it is supposed to be, achievement and effort are rewarded. In China ambitious people are "criminals" who have to bribe officials (people like yourselves) to look the other way so they can do business. Monopolies are strictly products of government intervention (ever heard of the post office) not free markets. The department of injustice needs to earn it's official title or get a new address ending in R.O.C.
